“Mexican migrants in NY-USA: changing eating habits, overweight, obesity and diabetes”

by

Esperanza Tuñón Pablos, Ph.D.
Senior Researcher
Gender Studies, Department of Society and Culture
El Colegio de la Frontera Sur (ECOSUR)
San Cristobal de Las Casas, Chiapas

Friday, September 25, 2015
3:30 pm

Business Administration Building, Room B-29
University at Albany – Main Campus

Esperanza Tuñón Pablos earned a doctorate in Sociology from the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM). She is a senior researcher in the academic group of Gender Studies in the Department of Society and Culture at El Colegio de la Frontera Sur (ECOSUR) in San Cristobal de Las Casas, Chiapas. Her work specializes in gender studies and social movements, migration and the status of women, research lines which she has pursued for over 30 years. She has published eight books and over 60 articles on these subjects. She is a Level 3 researcher in the National System of Researchers (SNI) of Mexico and was the General Director of ECOSUR from 2008 to 2013. She is a member of the International Sociological Association (ISA), the Network of Gender Studies in Southeastern Mexico (REGEN) of the ANUIES, the Network of Gender and Environment (GSMA) of CONACYT, the Mexican Network of Science, Technology and Gender (Red MEXCITEG) and the Mexican Academy of Sciences (AMC) where she was president of the regional southeast chapter between 2010 and 2012.

Reception Following Talk