Elena Vesselinov holds a Ph.D. from the Department of Sociology, University at Albany. Her research interests include urban inequality, in its social and spatial dimensions, comparative urbanization, international migration, and globalization. She is working on a book manuscript about gated communities in the United States, based on a project funded by the National Institutes of Health. Her most current work, in collaboration with Mary Clare Lennon, focuses on studying the benefits of empirically defined mixed-income neighborhoods in urban areas, using longitudinal Census data.
